

TIME FOR KIDS

Spotlight

Last year ERIC ENSEY, center, showed his students something about a textbook that just didn't add up. There were only three pages about slavery in their 237-page American history book! So the fifth-grade teacher at Endeavour Elementary School in Issaquah, Washington, challenged the class to find out all it could about African-American slavery. The students used information from a CD-ROM about black history produced by Encarta Africana and africana.com to create a website called "Never Again: Students Explore the Slavery Experience." The kids wrote the text, created the artwork and put it all together. To see their illustrations, visit www.africana.com/slavery.
