are superstores making our homes obsolete? At the Reebok Sports Club/NY, you can drop your kids off at exercise class before going to work in the business center, then practice rock climbing before heading to Barnes & Noble to catch up on your reading, meet an attractive stranger, and have your first date at the coffee bar. Finally, nip over to the new Sony Style store on Madison Avenue, where you can listen to new CDs and book concert tickets, then go downstairs to the fab 1940s-style lounge to watch movies while Donna Karan-dressed salespeople bring you tea sandwiches. "This may be the first electronics store where women will feel comfortable," says designer James Mansour, who has also done the interiors for the Limited and Victoria's Secret stores. "The only thing that's missing is a bed."
