Take that! Aaron Harnick (above) put up with only so much cheek-tweaking from mom Barbara Barrie before tweaking back. The "Judy Berlin" co-stars turned out Wednesday for the launch of a film series at Loews State Theater. Also there: Sarah Jessica Parker, who hadn't been told it was a benefit for the Ovarian Cancer Research Fund in Madeline Kahn's memory. After three TV interviewers asked for her feelings about Kahn and the cause, the usually unflappable Parker blared, "I just want to see the movie!" and dashed inside.

various candidates but that reveal, on closer inspection, to be satire or attempts at political sabotage. There are at least half a dozen sites aimed at curtailing George W. Bush's run for the White House, but McCain's appearance on the racy site is the first reported cyber-lunge at the increasingly popular Vietnam War pilot.

A spokeswoman at McCain headquarters said campaign officials were unaware of the ad. "We don't know anything about it. It must be a mistake," she said.

MAYOR GIULIANI refused to solve the mystery of his missing wedding ring yesterday. Asked at a press conference about our story on his jewelry-free left hand, Hizzoner said: "I respectfully suggest that is none of your business." ...

TOMMY HILFIGER's love affair with rock fashion goes on. The designer hosted a raucous jam by veteran punkers and metalheads at Wilson's Bar and Grill on Tuesday. Banging their axes were members of Joan Jett's band, as well as Blue Oyster Cult, the Plasmatics and Cheap Trick. Cops broke up the party after midnight. ...

MARTHA STEWART turned heads Wednesday when she showed up at the New York Armory Art Show looking like she'd stepped out of her toolshed — in jeans. Other socialites, including Ann Bass and White House interior designer Kiki Hockensmith, dressed up for the Art Dealers Association of America gala, which benefits the Henry Street Settlement.
